

Managing Hybrid Teams

Hybrid working is here to stay. This workshop explores the challenges, frustrations and new leadership skills that any manager needs to navigate to re-engage and connect with their disparate teams.

Develop management skills to lead hybrid teams

Changing expectations and multiple working practices are contributing to the challenge of leading hybrid teams in a tech-driven world of work.

Through discussions and the sharing of best practice we will gain clarity and deeper understanding of what managers can do, and what their teams need, when working in the new normal. Whilst there is no single solution to answer and define leadership in the hybrid workplace, this workshop offers managers time to reflect and hear ideas on what can work to get better at defining their role, boundaries and connection when supporting others.

Workshop features

Managing, motivating and supporting others in the hybrid landscape are the key themes explored in this experiential workshop, helping participants to understand their place and role as a leader in the world of hybrid working.

After completing this workshop, participants will be able to...

- Understand and act on what can be holding them back in embracing hybrid working
- Be aware of beliefs held by themselves and others regarding this way of working
- Gain ideas and tools to develop and sustain trust with others
- Understand the needs of the team working in different locations and on different platforms
- Understand the need to set boundaries and expectations
- Be aware of the conversations they may need to have to ensure consistent, agreed ways of working
